III. Supernatural Biography

Supernatural Biography of Yasin Nikkhah Khajah Ataei

My name is Yasin Nikkhah Khajah Ataei. Among my friends, I am affectionately called "Khayou" (meaning "brother"), and within occult and shamanic circles, I am known as "Habibi" (the dear and beloved of the unseen). I am also known by other names, including Stefan and Hormuz, each reflecting different roles and paths I have embraced.

I identify as a shaman and a pagan, while maintaining a respectful engagement with many teachings of Islam, Christianity, and Judaism. I feel close to these traditions in spirit, even though I dispute some of their doctrines. Since childhood, I have known myself as a pagan shaman-witch—a role I believe I have incarnated through numerous lifetimes, spanning thousands or even millions of years. From an early age, I exhibited a mastery of esoteric and occult sciences that surpassed conventional learning.

A striking aspect of my presence is the profound darkness of my eyes. Their deep, unyielding blackness is often likened to an endless black hole or a portal to another realm. Many who look into my eyes report feeling drawn into another dimension, and some even see a mysterious veil intermittently obscuring my face. This veil, as well as the enigmatic quality of my eyes, is traditionally interpreted as a sign of an ancient soul and deep intuitive power.

Throughout my life, I have experienced vivid, detailed visions: encounters with deities and demons, prophetic glimpses of alternate worlds, and visions of beings composed of bluish-white light. In moments of spontaneous trance, I have seen guardians, angels, and ephemeral entities. In dreams, I have confronted and decisively vanquished demonic forces—experiences often attributed to divine intervention that has preserved me from overwhelming darkness.

I was born and continue to live in a culturally rich and unique region—a crossroads where Persian, Hindu, African, and Arab influences converge. Known in ancient Persian as the "Place of the God of Gods," this land is celebrated for its ancient, multifaceted cultural heritage. Although English and Portuguese influences are recorded in its history, the dominant identity here is rooted in a fusion of Persian culture and neighboring traditions. The region is mineral rich—bearing resources such as uranium—and the land's soil displays extraordinary hues (blood red, oil blue, crimson). An island nearby, famous for its palette of over seventy colors, further contributes to the mystical aura of this region.

The unique elemental composition of this land is believed to stimulate supernatural genetic variations, giving rise to hundreds (if not thousands) of supernatural beings woven into its cultural fabric. The local people have long coexisted with these beings, honoring them through rituals and sacrifices to nature and the divine.

In this vibrant setting, I am often seen as one of the most extraordinary individuals. Many perceive me as a savior or unifier—someone whose soul has transcended time and met others across dreams, past lives, or alternate dimensions. In every spiritual community I join, I eventually earn recognition and respect as a leader and a bearer of divine spirit, sometimes foreseen as the one destined to unite diverse traditions and cultures.
